Norman Lindsay Art Works Hit The Market For The First Time in Thornleigh

Bargain Hunt Auctions to Sell Original Works by the Celebrated Artist

Sunday 6 May 2018

Bargain Hunt Auctions is proud to premier three striking pen and ink illustrations by the renowned artist Norman Lindsay. Covering the period of the First World War and aftermath they were created by Lindsay for the Australian news magazine The Bulletin – known for its strong literary and political platforms.

The art works form part of a consignment from the family of Emily Sarah Dryden Barnett MacCulloch. Emily worked with Norman Lindsay in the heyday of The Bulletin and it is believed she was, for a brief period, a girlfriend of the artist. These illustrations were given to her by Norman Lindsay personally as a gift for her 21st birthday.

The Art Works:

Norman Lindsay, 'His Day', pen and ink, signed, 40cm x 57cm

Norman Lindsay, 'The Squeal', pen and ink, signed, 48cm x 53cm

Norman Lindsay, 'The Slave Raids', pen and ink, signed, 39cm x 34cm

All these images offer commentary on the Australian political climate both during and after the First World War.

About Bargain Hunt Auctions:

Since 2005, Bargain Hunt Auctions has offered the best in antiques, fine art and collectables to buyers worldwide from its auction house in Thornleigh, Sydney. Often featuring art, antiques, furniture, jewellery, and unique treasures that can't be found anywhere else, sales at BHA are always exciting.

Owned by Mark and Veronica Owens, the husband and wife team has more than 20 years of experience in antiques and auctioneering. They made headlines around the world when a single page of the Quran sold for an incredible $74000, and nationally with their principled stand against the sale of ivory.
